Relationship Strengths

Tim and Tara are efficient, purposeful, and somewhat assertive when communicating with each other.

Tara is eager to start conversations and will typically be the communication initiator with Tim.

Tim and Tara take a transactive approach to communication, quickly getting to the point, and moving on to the next topic.

Tim and Tara communicate informally and on an ad-hoc basis, and will actively seek information when they feel it's needed.

Relationship Cautions

Tim and Tara may work hard to persuade each other, but may not listen closely to each other when there is disagreement.

Tim may be overwhelmed by Tara's eagerness to have a conversation, and Tim may politely seek to shorten or avoid interactions with Tara.

Tim and Tara may have difficulty moving a conversation forward constructively when they do not agree with each other or when they are both indecisive.

Tim and Tara can have constructive conversations, but they may avoid formal communication modes, which might mean that they do not have good notes or records to which they can refer back.

Relationship Tips

Tim and Tara should consciously acknowledge that each person has perspectives and information that could be beneficial to the other.

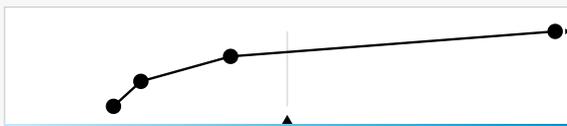

Tara should set up a time to speak with Tim rather than dropping by and asking Tim questions spur of the moment, but Tim should also make the effort to ask Tara for feedback or opinions.

Tim and Tara should be sure not to talk past each other, and they should try to self-regulate to make sure the other person understands what they are trying to say.

Tim and Tara may not keep track of their discussions, so using electronic modes of communication might help them keep a record so they can refer back to it later.
